MODERN THEATERS ARE INTRODUCED

French Post-Office System Is Being Revolutionized.

JUDGE DELIVERS AN ODD DECISION

Holds That Flesh and Blood Scenes May Be Perfectly Proper in Theatre, But Highly Improper When Photographed for Posters.

BY GEORGES DUFRESNE.
(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, November 13.—Our new Postmaster-General, M. Millerand, who was once a Socialist, is revolutionizing the post-office. From January 1 next, the time required for obtaining a money order will be reduced from an average of forty-five minutes to perhaps less than half that time. Moreover, one may now send with a halfpenny stamp, a picture postcard containing actually five words, and in those five words you may say anything you like, barring, of course, libel, whereas, until M. Millerand came, the five words had to be merely complimentary.

Finally, the post-office check system is to be introduced. The cautious French mind has never taken easily to checks, but government checks, at any rate, will be above suspicion. At any post-office customers will be permitted to open a banking account on the usual lines. Money orders will thus be done away with in the case of all persons having such accounts.

Not a Layman's Task.
The judicial and his mysteries, which it is not the layman's task to penetrate. Proceedings were begun against a music hall manager for publishing an alleged improper advertisement of a show. It represented a very of women, whose the public prosecutor considered to have been portrayed in an insufficiently clothed state. The case came on, and the prosecution proved its argument. It was enough to look at the incriminating poster. So far the defendant had held his tongue, but his counsel now got up and triumphantly rebutted the charge. He proved conclusively that the alleged improper poster was an exact photograph of a scene played nightly in his client's hall.

The prosecution acknowledged this to be a fact. The scene in question had been permitted by the police, and every one could see it that very evening for a shilling. An exact photograph of a scene, which the police had not deemed improper, could not be called improper. The argument seemed unanswerable, and counsel sat down and awaited the verdict. The court answered it very decisively, however, and amazed the defendant by convicting him and fining him $60. The principle and precedent laid down were that a scene played by flesh and blood actors on the stage may be permitted, while its exact reproduction in a photograph may be detrimental to good morals.

A Strange Rescue.
A telegram from Montpellier gives particulars of a strange rescue which a soldier, named Giron, employed in order to escape his discharge. When he arrived at Beller's he declared that he was suffering from sleeping sickness. He was placed under observation, and kept without food or drink for forty-eight hours. Neither injections nor baths were effective in arousing the soldier from his lethargy.

It was decided to discharge him. Then the schemer, filled with joy at the prospect of his release from military service, wrote a letter to his parents boasting of the "trick" he had played on the majors. The letter was signed, and Giron, now completely awake, was transferred from the hospital to a cell.

Teems With Riches.
Morocco is, we are told by experts, teeming with mineral riches. An immediate result of the act of Algeiras was the creation of a state of affairs representing England, France, Spain and Germany, to draft a scheme of Moroccan mining legislation.

Muley Had had all along been up to granting concessions to would-be explorers and yet, until the arrival of the Marquis de Segonzac, a recognized authority in Moroccan matters, that the German brothers, named Mannesmann, the working of mineral deposits in no fewer than 600 places, covering the whole territory of Morocco, the Ritz included.

On a score that a friend in need is a friend in deed, the Mannesmanns had secured a lot of money at a critical moment, until the total amount of the Sultan's indebtedness reached 2,000,000 marks.

PRESIDENT'S CAR INVADDED BY HOBBO

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A poor, unshaven, unkempt, manneering "hobbo," seeking shelter from a ticket-hunting conductor on board the Federal express bound from Boston to Washington last night, wandered happily into President Taft's private car, the Mayflower, locked himself in the kitchen and created the greatest excitement of all the president's travels.

"Jimmie" Sloan, of the secret service, was given the rare opportunity of distinguishing himself by making a real arrest while Will Anderson and Ed Letcher, the two presidential porters of the Pullman service, became real heroes. The incident occurred just outside Bridgeport, Conn., and it was to the authorities of that town that the "hobbo" was delivered by Sloan.

President Taft had spent the day in Middletown and the evening in Hartford, Conn. Leaving the latter place at 10:30 o'clock last night, his car was switched on to the Federal express at New Haven shortly after midnight.

Two local day coaches had been placed on the express ahead of the president's car, and it was from one of these that the hobbo found his way into the front end of the Mayflower.

Broadus, the cook, who has the reputation of being the best culinary expert in the Pullman service, had finished reading his Bible and turned in, leaving the kitchen empty. The hobbo was quick to see this, once he had slipped inside the private car, and darted into the galley amid copper pots and pans, and softly closing the door, bolted it on the inside.

The train was speeding on toward Bridgeport when Letcher, or "Letch," as the president calls him, tried to get into the kitchen. The fact that it was locked puzzled him a bit, but gave him no great concern.

He obtained Anderson's keys and as the lock on the door works with the inside bolt, he soon had it open. "Letch" almost turned white in his first excitement over seeing the "hobbo" crouched in a corner, but in another minute he had pounced on the wanderer and had safely embraced him in arms that hugged with the strength of a grizzly.

TRONG OF EXILES ON RUE DE LA PAIX

There One May See Both the Noted and Notorious.

EVENING PARADE A MOTLEY GROUP

It Is Street of All Nations, Although Americans Seem to Own It—One of "Forty Immortals" Falls Victim to Charms of Actress.

BY MARQUIS DE CASTELANE.

PARIS, November 13.—While the Rue de la Paix, said to be the most beautiful street in the world, attracts the noted and notorious of all nations, the Americans who are really said to dominate it. Its myriads of pretty minarets, its gems, sparkling in the shop windows, its commanding view of Napoleon's column, one of the place, the L'Opera theatre, are all fascinating and attractive.

But it is chiefly to gaze at each other that the motley throng walk there every day from five to seven. One sees Prince George of Greece promenading in pleasing exile; ex-Mayor Van Wyck, of New York, in costume and bearing; Harris Phelps, the only American who ever became a French citizen; Perry Belmont, looking a bit out of sorts; Nat Goodwin, with one side of his face, the other spelling the shrewd financier.

Again one sees General Spiridovich following in the train of a rich widow well known to Parisian society; Abe Hummel, wearing a hunted look; George Moore, growing because his novels do not sell; a ticket-hunter, looking for a ticket to the opera; a Duke of Rohan, jostling the smiling Billy Robinson, of New York; Sellers McKee, arm in arm with his wife, the festive Hart; Colonel Watterston, between two middle-aged men whom he jealously terms "his boys," and finally the Duke of Sparta, tall and distinguished, wondering if he really will ever mount the throne of Greece.

So you see the Rue de la Paix is to a certain extent the Street of All Nations, although the Americans seem to own it.

Arduous Not Dampened.
The blind deity has found a way to the heart of one of our most illustrious first of Frenchmen, Monsieur Anatole France, first of Frenchmen, officer of the Legion of Honor and member of the Academy—in other words, one of the "Forty Immortals." Yes, the heart of this illustrious academician has been pierced by the arrows shot from the black and beautiful eyes of a Mademoiselle Brindeau, one of our rising young actresses. It is safe to say that Anatole France, whose real name is Jacques Anatole Thibault, stands at the head of the French men of letters to-day.

Some months ago he was invited by the government of the Argentine Republic to deliver a series of lectures. At Buenos Ayres he met his pretty compatriot, Mademoiselle Brindeau. She had beauty, talent and bright eyes; he had wit, learning and glittering gold. The snows of sixty-five winters had not dampened the ardor of the great "Immortal."

Returning to France by the same steamer, the feeling between the two lovers deepened. The course of true love never did run smooth. As the gallant Anatole was endeavoring to clear the forty-odd trunks of his lovely actress and save her from all annoyance of customs officials, the unassuming Brindeau, who had been broken upon his ears. With an imperious and commanding gesture she beckoned Anatole to follow her, which he did. The woman who exercised such sway over the fierce revolutionary, the man who had been broken upon his ears, whom it seems he is indebted for substantial aid—aid proffered and accepted during his days of obscurity and struggle. But as this woman already has a husband of her own, arrangements are being made for her to leave the country.

Since Alphonse Daudet wrote "Kings in Exile," and even long before, royal exiles of all nations have sought to find a panacea for grief in the brightness and gaiety of Paris life. We have seen in Paris the princes of the royal house of Greece.

We have also two charming American women—namely, Mrs. Charles Carroll and Mrs. Frederick Bell. A rivalry has sprung up between them, it seems, of which the young prince, the Duke of Sparta, is the victim. He is going about with Prince George one day, and the next he assists at a luncheon at Mrs. Bell's. Mrs. Carroll has something to do with the advantage because she speaks perfect French, her mother having been a French noblewoman. On the other hand, the hospitable widow is very rich. She has been said to order fifty frocks at once in the Rue de la Paix; and is noted for the splendid festivities at her mansion in the Rue Barbey de Jouy. Furthermore, she is said to be particularly fond of rich American widows. So it would seem Mrs. Bell is triumphant.

Gallant in Love and War.
We have one young general in France who has distinguished himself both in love and war. He did gallant fighting as commander-in-chief of the French troops in Mexico, and when ill-health compelled him to resign, he returned to France literally covered with honors.

Having conquered the enemies of his country, the young general next set about conquering old General Fortoul, a rich, brilliant, accomplished woman, whom, although enough, he met on the battlefield of a far-off Morocco town. Madame Fortoul had left home, country, friends, society to cast in her lot with the suffering and dying. It was as a Red Cross nurse that she attracted the attention of General Lantey. Now he has just led her to the altar.

Madame Fortoul has been compared in looks to the exquisite Madame Letellier, wife of Henri Letellier, owner of the Paris Journal. Others think she resembles Mrs. George Law, of New York, but every one is agreed the general has won a prize.

Love Tragedies.
The last scientific work of Professor Lombroso's life was to collect some statistics of "love tragedies." Lombroso claimed that the greater number of suicides among the Latin races came from disappointment in love. He found in his researches that women died tragically from disappointed love more frequently than men. He showed that of such suicides 70 per cent. are women. In America he found more men suicides than women, but, however, due to blighted affections, but to money losses.

The following story is told of Lombroso and Chief of the Prefecture of Rome. When Goron was in active police service he received a letter from Lombroso asking for a set of photographs of female offenders. In an adjoining drawer Mr. Goron kept a set of photos of street vendors, all of good, hardworking women, mothers of families, and eminently respectable and trustworthy. There was no reason for keeping such photos, except the clause in the law requiring market women to take out a permit to sell their wares in the streets. In his haste Mr. Goron forwarded these photos instead of those of the female offenders and criminals. The professor, thinking he had a precious collection of crime to work upon wrote out his conclusions as follows:

No. 1 is a confirmed drunkard; No. 2, absolutely irresponsible for her acts; No. 3, all the instincts of a murderer; and so on for the whole fifty of the collection. And all the while the real culprits were slumbering peacefully in the drawer of Mr. Goron's desk.

But Professor Lombroso has promised to see us and we are doing in the other world through the celebrated Italian medium, Eusapia Palladino, so we may have some explanation of this matter. If the eminent criminologist was not able to justify his error during his lifetime, he may be able to do so now that he is dead.
